In addition, a new unit formed at Bradley ANG Base in 2008 is known as the 103rd Air Operations Group or “Yankee Vigilance.”

The combat, command and planning experience of Connecticut’s airmen will form the foundation of an Air Operations Center/Air Mobility Detachment (AOC/AMD) at Bradley in the 103rd Air Operations Group. Experienced fighter, airlift and bomber airmen will find exciting opportunities in the AOC/AMD not available before today.

Bradley Getting New Operations Center: Construction activities have begun at Bradley Air National Guard Base in East Granby, Connecticut, to erect the new building that will house the air and space operations center run by the 103rd Airlift Wing. Under BRAC 2005, the Air Guard wing is adding the new facility for its state-of-the-art center as well as offices, conference space, and training areas. The wing's 103rd Air and Space Operations Group will manage the AOC, which is expected to commence initial operations next spring. "As we literally build this new capability from the ground up, I see a bright future ahead of us," said Col. Peter DePatie, 103rd AOG boss. The groundbreaking ceremony for the facility took place earlier this month. Friday 27 Aug 2010
