EMBLEM

On a white disc within a narrow Old Glory red border an Air Force blue torch with red flame placed vertically in the center above the fifth of nine encircling Air Force yellow stars edged red. Surmounting top of torch below flame a white sphere outlined, grided and encircled by two crossing orbits all red. Overall, in base a red lion passant outlined and detailed yellow. Below a white scroll edged Old Glory red and inscribed with Air Force blue capital letters. (Approved, 23 Nov 1964) SIGNIFICANCE: The emblem is symbolic of the squadron and its mission. The torch of knowledge represents the units primary mission, basic military training, and denotes the courage, self-assurance, rigid discipline, and teamwork necessary for its successful accomplishment. The lion refers to the strength of the trained airmen eager to go forth throughout the world to serve his country in this atomic age. The globe depicts the present realm influenced by the squadron through its well-trained airmen while the lightning bolts allude to the future space program. The stars signify the "O-nine" in the units numerical designation. The emblem bears the Air Force colors, golden yellow and ultramarine blue and the national colors, red, white and blue.
