EMBLEM

On a disc as a globe on its axis to sinister Azure, gridlined Argent, charged at nombril with a cross Sanguine, overall a lightning flash from pole in sinister chief to pole in sinister base Or, all within a narrow border Black. Attached below the disc, a Yellow scroll edged with a narrow Black border and inscribed "937TH TRAINING SUPPORT SQ" in Black letters. Attached above the disc, a Yellow scroll edged with a narrow Black border and inscribed "LEADING THE BEST" in Black letters. SIGNIFICANCE: Ultramarine blue and Air Force yellow are the Air Force colors. Blue alludes to the sky, the primary theater of Air Force operations. Yellow refers to the sun and the excellence required of Air Force personnel. The lightning bolt signifies the Squadron's nickname, "Team STRIKE," an acronym for "Support and Train Readiness with Integrity, Knowledge and Excellence." The globe represents global medical readiness enabled via support and training. The globe also alludes to the night sky and day, signifying the 24-hour mission of the military instructors and support staff. The cross signifies the medical readiness training that provides combat-ready Airmen.

OPERATIONS

Airmen from the 937th Training Support Squadron execute a ruck march May 18 at the Medical Readiness Training Center, Joint Base San Antonio-Camp Bullis. The march was held as part of a final commander's call for Lt. Col. Jon T. Mohatt, who leaves for an assignment in Falls Church, Va., in June. With a presence on both JBSA-Fort Sam Houston and Camp Bullis, the 937th TRSS is responsible for supporting the Medical Education Training Campus' Air Force component as well as providing medical readiness training to more than 6,000 Airmen a year.

As part of the Base Realignment and Closure Act, the 937th TRSS moved from Sheppard Air Force Base to JBSA-Fort Sam Houston, and the MRTC stood up at Camp Bullis during Mohatt's two-year tenure as commander. "It's been a remarkable honor to command such an excellent team and I am humbled to have been their servant leader for the past two years," Mohatt said during his last commander's call. "It will be extremely difficult to hand off this squadron, but I know they will continue to excel." Team STRIKE – the acronym for the squadron's mission of "Support and Train Readiness with Integrity, Knowledge and Excellence" – conducts a ruck march as part of its Aeromedical Evacuation Contingency Operations Training course.

The ruck march is comprised of a 3.4 mile hike with land navigation between multiple points. The ruck march is used to place students in a simulated deployment environment, and train them to use maps and compasses to locate air-dropped supplies and move them to a build site.
