MOTTO

OPERATIONS

The division entered combat in Sep 1943, performing strategic bombardment against Axis targets in the European theater of operations. During the weeks immediately preceding D Day (6 June 1944), division aircraft bombed tactical targets such as German communications centers and lines of support, and on D Day hit targets on the Cherbourg Peninsula immediately behind the landing beaches. In August 1948, the division assumed the job of administering and controlling attached SAC bombardment, fighter, and reconnaissance organizations deployed in England for training. From 3 Jan 1949-21 Jan 1951, as a major command the division controlled large numbers of USAF organizations based in the United Kingdom and supervised a tremendous airfield construction program. It also provided aircraft maintenance support for C-54s.

During the 3rd Air Division's status as a major command (1949-1951), it controlled large numbers of USAF organizations based in the United Kingdom and supervised a tremendous airfield construction program. Mission was to coordinate Air Force requirements for British resources and facilities, negotiate agreements with British Air Ministry, and plan implementation of approved Air Force emergency war plans as they pertain to United Kingdom and British possessions.

In early 1954, Headquarters USAF directed that the FEAF Bomber Command be discontinued and that its three B-29 wings be returned to the United States and equipped with B-47s. It was at this time that FEAF's 19th Bomb Wing was reassigned to SAC. On 18 June, concurrent with the inactivation of the FEAF Bomber Command at Yokota Air Base, Japan, Headquarters 3d Air Division was activated at Andersen Air Force Base, Guam, and assigned to SAC. The new division was manned largely with people from the FEAF Bomber Command. Brigadier General Joseph D. Caldara, the last commander of FEAF Bomber Command, became the first 3d Air Division Commander. The 3d Air Division's primary responsibility was to control all SAC units operating in the Far East and to monitor the construction of bases and facilities to support these operations. Throughout 1954, the 3d Air Division operated as a tenant at Andersen, with logistical support provided by FEAF's 6319th Air Base Wing.
