

13 SPACE WARNING SQUADRON

MISSION

The primary mission of the 13 Space Warning Squadron is to provide Early Warning of Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles and Sea-Launched Ballistic Missiles. Its secondary mission is to provide Space Surveillance data on orbiting objects to the Space Control Center also located in the Cheyenne Mountain Complex.

The 13 SWS accomplishes these missions using the Solid State Phased Array Radar System radar, which is housed in a triangular-shaped 11 story building on site. The radar was originally located at El Dorado Air Station, Texas as part of the PAVE PAWS program and was only recently transplanted to Alaska to replace the United States' last mechanical missile warning radar site. The radar system has two faces which together form a coverage area 240 degrees wide and 3,000 miles deep into space. The coverage extends from the Arctic Ocean all the way to the West Coast of the lower 48 states. The remarkable capabilities of this weapon system are also useful to track near-earth satellites. The data generated ensures the United States is able to accurately catalog more than 16,000 objects in orbit. This allows manned orbital vehicles, like the Space Shuttle and International Space Station, to avoid harm and to closely monitor objects re-entering the atmosphere, which could impact populated areas.
