Beginning in 1950, the Air Force Reserve became involved in national censorship planning. The first effective training was conducted at a school operated by the Army at Fort Jay NY.

The 2277 Training Squadron (Censorship) was activated 15 Sep 51 to administer the program. The censorship and travel control branch of the air provost marshal of headquarters United States Air Force was responsible for training air force personnel assigned to the program, and continental air command was responsible for their administration.

During Jun 53 AIR FORCE RESERVE officers attended active-duty training course at Orlando Air Force Base FL. After 1953, the Army and Air Force alternated in providing training materials and sites for the active duty tours.

On 1 Feb 55, the 2277 Training Squadron (Censorship) was discontinued and the command's monitoring and administrative responsibilities were taken over by the CONAC air provost marshal.
