EMBLEM

4392 Mission Support Squadron emblem: On an ultramarine azure disc, two supporting hands are positioned at the base. A man, woman and child silhouette are placed at the nomenclature point and are supported by the hands. An argent launched missile jettisons from the dexter position leaving a gules exhaust cloud at dexter. Argent paper and quill are placed at sinister. Seven or estoiles encircle the Charges from slightly above dexter through the chief position to slightly above sinister on the disc. Each estoile radiates an argent line to the elements on the disc. The disc is bordered with or. An ultramarine azure scroll is attached below the disc. The scroll is blank and is also bordered with or. SIGNIFICANCE: Ultramarine blue and air force yellow are used in the design. Blue represents the sky, the primary theater of air Force operations. Yellow represents the sun and the Excellence required of air force-personnel. The overall design depicts the major missions the 4392 MSSQ supports. The hands are symbolic of the support of all the other elements of the emblem. The human figures represent the military members and their families for whom the unit provides service and support. The missile represents the primary mission of the two parent units of Vandenberg in which the 4392 MSSQ provides support. The paper and quill represent the education, training, services, and record keeping the squadron provides. The yellow stars represent the seven excellent branches of the 4392 in which support is rendered.
