OPERATIONS

Early in 1954, it was recognized that the requirements of the training organization could best be met with a Wing-base type set-up and approval for such a reorganization was granted by Twelfth Air Force. As an interim measure to facilitate this change, the 7330th Training Group Commander Col. Mark H Vinzant, Jr. assumed command of the base from the 7365th Air Base Squadron in May 1954. Until this time, the Group had existed as a tenant unit with its own Field Maintenance, Supply, Operations and Technical Training Squadrons. The shift now brought the 7365th under the jurisdiction of the Training Group as the Group assumed the housekeeping and support functions of the base.

The wheel of reorganization completed its full turn when the 7330th Training Group was redesignated a Wing on July 1, 1954, with jurisdiction over four groups and a Technical Training Squadron (the 7365th Air Base Squadron was inactivated on May 31, and its personnel absorbed within the Wing). Subsequently, the Wing was relieved of assignment to Twelfth Air Force and attached to the 7100th Support Wing at Wiesbaden for administrative and logistical support and directly assigned to Hq. USAFE for operational control. The word "Flying" was added to the official designation of the 7330th in October 1954.
