The joining of two separate entities is never an easy or quick process. The 94th Services Squadron and Mission Support Services merged Dec. 1, 2010, creating the 94th Force Support Squadron. Many challenges came about. Although change is difficult, the 94th FSS is now one unit and is moving forward. "It's always challenging to take separate units and merge them together," said Lt. Col. David Dick, 94th Force Support Squadron commander. "It's difficult to transition to take two different missions and cultures and rebuild them as one culture.” 94th Services’ mission was comprised of Morale, Welfare, and Recreation, Consolidated Club, Tickets & Tours, 94th Airlift Wing Honor Guard, mortuary affairs and installation readiness. 94th Mission Support Services’ (Personnel) included manpower and personnel, services sustainment, force development and Airmen and family readiness.

“There were also structural changes that we put into effect in order to facilitate the merger,” said Dick. Both units are “people oriented,” so for many, it was a logical choice merge them. “We physically consolidated a lot of the 94th FSS personnel Aug. 11,” Dick stated. Members of the squadron received and performed training during annual tour March 5-9 in order to continue and upgrade their specialized Air Force skills. “The main point of the Annual Tour was to complete Annual Training and to foster unit morale and cohesion,” said Master Sgt. Mark K. Brown, 94th FSS chief of personnel systems. 94th FSS members trained on the assembly and set-up an Alaska personnel shelter, which provides protection for personnel, equipment and supplies in all types of extreme climate and terrain, pallet build-up and transporting cargo on a C-130 aircraft and Self Aid and Buddy Care, which entails basic life support and limb-saving techniques to help wounded or injured personnel survive in medical emergencies.

Among the training, a Single Pallet Expeditionary Kitchen for a Troop Feeding was held at the Dobbins Lakeside softball field. The training is held quarterly. “The SPEK set-up serves as training, as well as our troop-feeding,” said Capt. Bethany George, 94th FSS Services Officer. The SPEK is highly mobile and is used in remote and undeveloped areas; it fits on a single cargo pallet. In the span of two hours, the SPEK can be up and ready for service. Ultimately, the 94th FSS trains to be capable and ready to deploy at a moment’s notice, to maintain a state of 100 percent readiness. “Everyone did an exceptional job during annual training, and continues to work together as a cohesive unit,” said Dick.
