

HQ AIR FORCE ACQUISITION LOGISTICS DIVISION

Hq Air Force Acquisition Logistics Division (AFALD), Building Area B. Activated in July 1976, AFALD was formed to expand and strengthen the interface between the Air Force Logistics Command and the Air Force Systems Command.

A significant event within AFLC was the July 1, 1976 activation of the Air Force Acquisition Logistics Division (AFALD). The new division was formed from existing AFLC sources, primarily the Deputy Chief of Staff for Acquisition Logistics and the 2732nd Acquisition Logistics Operations Squadron. AFALD's mission was to expand and strengthen the interface between AFLC and the Air Force Systems Command (AFSC), thus improving operational utility, field availability, and supportability of new systems, while reducing their operating and support costs. The Air Force Acquisition Logistics Division was designed to act as a catalyst to stimulate and improve the AFLC/AFSC interchange of knowledge, particularly the flow of feedback information from users in the combat commands.

A second major AFLC organization was created at WPAFB in 1978. The AFLC International Logistics Center (ILC), identified as a "major field organization," was activated effective May 1, 1978. The new center merged elements of the Hq AFLC Office of the Assistant for International Logistics and most of the international logistics functions of AFALD. The ILC had three principal offices: plans and procedures, programs and resources, and operations. Its charter was to establish and implement an AFLC International Logistics Program for the development, negotiation, and management of AFLC Security Assistance programs. This included foreign military sales, grant aid, and international military education and training.
